

The smallest English road atlas at this time, Britannia depicta (see 1720), is enormous compared to Louis Denis' road atlas of France. This tiny road book measuring only 95 x 60 mm. is engraved throughout and its frontispiece/title-page features the transport of those days.

There is a general folding map of France (see below) and sixty one single page strip road maps of the routes between Paris and the principal provincial towns. These are printed on the versos with descriptive text relating to that route on the facing rectos. This was the fourth and last of Denis' miniature atlases and was undoubtedly the inspiration for Louis-Charles Desnos to produce a miniature version of his own larger format road atlas (see 1771).

Itinéraire historique et topographique des grandes routes de France. Paris, Louis Denis, Jacques J. Pasquier & Ramonet, 1768, 1771.

