A book about Europe written by Giovanni N. Doglioni was issued in 1623. Its Venetian publisher, Giacomo Sarzina, illustrated it with maps set within the text, each about 105/110 x 70/80 mm.

The engraver of the miniature plates is not known, but they were copied from those by Philip Galle in his pocket Ortelius and not those of Pietro M. Marchetti in the Italian version. The source must have been an edition of 1595 or later, possibly the 1602 one with Italian text. It is thought that they were not reprinted.

There is an oval world map and thirty-three other ones: Europe; England; Scotland; Ireland; Spain; Portugal; France; Savoy; Germany; Switzerland; Brabant; Flanders; Zeeland; Holland; Bohemia; Friuli; Istria; Italy; Piedmont; The Marches; Tuscany; Lombardy; Sardinia; Corsica; Sicily; Slavonia; Hungary; Transilvania; Greece; Corfu; Crete; Poland; the North Atlantic.

In both examples seen, the oval world map was printed upside down, with a cut out example pasted the right way up on top of it.
